Wsparcie społeczne osób uzależnionych w polskim systemie leczenia odwykowego

Socjopedagogiczne studium porównawcze

This dissertation deals with the topic of social support for the addicts in the Polish alcohol addiction treatment system. For the purposes of the research and analysis of the obtained data, the understanding of social support as a multi-entity and complex social system shaped by supported personal entities and supporting entities, understood as a support network between in which there are altruistic and humanitarian interactions was adopted, and the whole system is rooted in a specific environmental context. In connection with the above, the subject of the conducted research was broadly understood social support for the addicts and the quality of interactions provided by alcohol addiction treatment facilities located in the Mazovian voivodship in the assessment of their patients with a subsequent comparative analysis of the results.

Social support for the addicts in public and private institutions is an area that has not been explored in the proposed form so far. A similar analysis of the activities of addiction treatment centers has not been found in the existing scientific achievements, which gives an opportunity to find out the answer to the question of the opinion of recipients of medical and psychological services on the quality of services offered there. It was the main motivation of the author of this dissertation.

The author undertook an analysis of the results of the conducted research, which took into account the opinions of patients of alcohol rehabilitation centers and contained conclusions from the interviews conducted for the purposes of this hearing with the Human Rights Defender and the Patient Ombudsman. The author also presented a detailed summary and conclusions of her research, as well as presented recommendations and pedagogical postulates based on the obtained results.

This dissertation is a socio-pedagogical comparative study, and therefore the comparative nature of the work has led to the formulation of conclusions about the advantages and disadvantages of drug addiction treatment centers in the public and private sectors as assessed by their patients. The assessment results from a multifaceted and in-depth analysis, the conclusions of which may be an indication for people managing this system.
